 THIS AN IN-DEPTH REVIEW THAT CONTAINS SPOILERS  She's a princess and I'm no one's Prince Charming • After the death of her mother and stepfather, her two stepbrothers send twenty-year-old Beth, who is in remission following a prolonged illness, to a Catholic boarding school for girls to finish her high school education. The heads of a powerful, criminal empire, Colin and Matthew Donahue are violent, vicious men. Colin has made it clear to Beth that he intends to have much more than a sisterly relationship with her. Beth feels trapped “ by Colin’s plans for her, by her illness and by her lack of life experiences. She starts sneaking out of school, and it is during one of those excursions that she meets Skull. Flattered by his attention and curious about the tattooed biker, she ultimately knows that nothing can come of it and that she probably should be running from him, but she can’t resist the pull to him and begins sneaking out to see him every day. Skull, the hardened and brutal president of the Devil’s Blaze MC, knows she’s too young for him, he knows she’s inexperienced, but he doesn’t even try to fight his attraction to her. It isn’t long, though, before Colin’s henchmen catch on to her activities with the biker, and Colin’s warning to her is decisively and painfully clear: she is to stop seeing Skull and accept her place with him. “I need to have faith in my man.” Not wanting to succumb to a life as Colin’s wife, Beth instead plans to run. Before she disappears, though, she wants to spend a few days with Skull so she has those experiences and memories with him when she goes. Neither could foresee just how their attraction to and need for each other would become so all-consuming and urgent.
