Synopsis

What do motivational speakers, salespeople, preachers, and lawyers have in common? They are all in the business of convincing people, and they do it well. In fact, they do it so well, that this is their job - to persuade people to "buy" what they are selling, whether it's an actual product, or a concept, a story, an ideology, etc. A motivational speaker's job is to convince you to such an extent, that you become motivated and determined to follow the steps that they are explaining to you. Persuasion is their "bread and butter". Salespeople are the same; their livelihood depends on persuading you to buy the products they are advertising. They are skilled at their craft and employ various psychological techniques to convince you to cave in and make a purchase. Think about car salesmen and how well-known they are for their selling abilities. You have to be pretty good to persuade someone to buy a used car. Pretty impressive, right? The stakes are much higher when it comes to people like lawyers and preachers. Their job is to convince judges and juries and entire congregations, respectively. Their oral skills have to be impeccable, as well as their delivery, a tone of voice, facial expressions, and penetrating gaze. Their stance admits no hesitation; they have to inspire unmovable determination and confidence. That is ultimately what sways people in their direction.

For me having confidence with our self can help us fight anxiety. Because I believe that if you are confident with yourself you only got a little chance to feel anxious about everyone else around you. You are satisfied of what you can do and that makes you happy. But yeah a little bit of change to improve one's self is always better. I love how the book trimmed down the specific topics that can actually help us to boost our confidence and how anxiety can affect our life. This is the perfect book that everyone should have in order for them to transform their mindset about themselves. Such an amazing book.

Confidence is very important, whether it's in your career or personal life. So if you think that your lack of self-confidence affects your productivity, then this book is for you. This will provide you with helpful advice and tips when it comes to overcoming anxiety during events such as public speaking. You will also find this guide useful in improving your communication skills, especially if you're a salesperson. With this, you'll be able to boost your self-esteem and be successful in whatever you do.

This book helps me boost up my confidence. I've learned a lot from this book because it tackles a lot of information. Not only I learned some basic but some psychological techniques. Short but informative and even facial expression is discussed here. Simply amazing.
